FINE CLERGYMEN EXPECT-ED AT S. S. CONVENTION

Irvinton, Ky., May 8. (Special)—T. B. Henderson is engaged in an active campaign in Sunday-School interests.

He hopes to secure Dr. Millens, of the Baptist Theological Seminary for an address at an evening session of the county convention at Hardinsburg. Dr. Millens is one of the clergymen of our country who is loyal to the associated Sunday-school work because he sees and knows its value.

The work has grown beyond the largest conception of the great Baptist layman, B. F. Jacobs, who planned it and who with godly men of other denominations carried it out.

Let all the people of all denominations rally to support the associated Sunday-school work. To it the Sunday-school owes all of its best ideas and we have no right to appropriate and use these and refuse to help to support a cause which is supplying us with the newest and best thought and plan for the development of first-class work in Sabbath School.

Maryville, April 8.—In the annual triangular debate and oratorical contest held simultaneously at Maryville, Jefferson City and Tusculum, between Maryville college, Carson-Newman and Washington-Tusculum, was a victory for the Maryville contestants.

The participants consisted of four debaters and two orators from each college, two debaters and one orator speaking at home, the other debating team at one neighboring institution and the second orator at the other institution.

According to the rules each debate won counted two points and each oration won one point.

The question for debate was, "Resolved, that the commission form of government is best for American citizens."

The Maryville debaters, J. G. Sims and W. A. Hamman, won the affirmative from Washington-Tusculum at Tusculum.

The negative upheld by P. R. Grabiel and J. L. Tweed, won from Carson-Newman at Maryville. The Hope cup presented by Hope Brothers, of Knoxville, therefore goes to Maryville for the ensuing year.

Our Interview With Mr. Newman.

The L. H. & St. L. R. R. pulled into Cloverport Monday night the private car of William Newman, former president of the New York Central Railroad and now member of the Advisory Board of the same company. Mr. Newman came here to see his brother, Albert Newman, who is at death's door at his home near town. He received word at Washington, D. C. of his brother's critical illness and hastened at once to see him.

As soon as Mr. Newman's car was switched on the side track our friend asked for permission of an interview for us, and his nephew, standing on the rear of the car, said "he will see no reporter tonight". Then the crowd outside the car, anxious for a glimpse of the railroad magnate, gave a laugh and before it had subsided Mr. Newman called our escort back and asked him what he did here. "I am a railroad man", he answered. This unlocked the door of his heart and he sent out a gracious invitation to the newspaper girl, waiting patiently for what she knew she was going to get—the life story of one of the biggest railroad men in the United States.

He stepped across the car and touched a button, and in a minute his manservant appeared with a waiter of white-rock water. We took a glass of the sparkling water and wanted to say "thank you" so bad that we almost strangled.

His greatest joy is helping ambitious young people. He has several young men and girls that he and Mrs. Newman are looking after, besides doing all they possibly can for their nieces and nephews.

"We have no children of our own," said Mr. Newman, "But we have children". "Every Sunday morning Mrs. Newman and I have all our nieces and nephews in New York to breakfast with us. We always have waffles for breakfast".

He touched the button again and the manservant came in, handed him a cigar and lighted it. The servant struck a match to light our friend's cigar, but he had already lighted it!

"You have had two love affairs, Mr. Newman?" we questioned. "Yes", he said, "Only one ever amounted to anything". He fell in love with an Arkansas girl, and she has been Mrs. William Newman thirty-five years.

Never Gets Blue.

Mr. Newman declares he never gets discouraged. He worries not. "I do not take life seriously." He said if things go wrong, he reasons that the good side is bound to come up sooner or later.

Nearly all his business associates are college men and he is perfectly at home with them. "I have cheek", said Mr. Newman. To look at his splendid head and well-placed ears, one is assured that Mr. Newman has more common sense, more gumption than he has cheek. "I use much slang", he said. But we did not notice it. He was as plain as an old shoe. He talked with ease and if he had been as poor as a church mouse, could not have been less assuming in his manner.

Mr. Newman is about 5 feet, 8 inches tall. His hair is gray and he is bald and they are kindest brown eyes. A pearl pipe to destroy the black tie was the only piece of he wore save a very neat, small-linked watch chain. His suit was blue with a gray stripe.

Lives The Simple Life.

Mr. Newman's social life is plain. He has health, and his appearance shows that he never neglects himself. His teeth are clean and his nails, though short, showed attention.

While we were sizing him up, Mr. Newman told us how much interest Mrs. Newman took in all the churches and he followed in her foot-steps. "I think the churches are doing a great work, and I give to them all."

Mr. Newman surprised us when he said he read little. "I read newspapers only." He chatted with us, at least an hour. Told us about his experiences with newspaper men, and said that he knew Col. Watterson.

"You have musical talent, Mr. Newman," we ventured. He laughed heartily. "Yes, I can sing "Amazing Grace and Jesus Lover Of My Soul", in the way of an old fashioned Methodist."

Mr. Newman was driven out to his brother's yesterday morning and expected to leave in the afternoon for New York.

HAVING SUCCESS WITH FAIR CATALOGUE

Gets $2,000 For Injuries

Trial of suit of Mrs. Hettie Lyons against L. H. & St. L. Ry. Mrs. Lyons has recently resided at Garfield. Claude Mercer represented her.

MRS. HERRON MAKES BIG PURCHASE AT STANLEY SALE

Mrs. Lucy F. Heron has just received two heifers and a bull which she purchased at the Stanley sale of Jerseys at Shelbyville, Ky. These three were among the best sold at the sale and include a son of the imported cow, Fox's Golden Lucy, a daughter of Flying Fox and a prize winner at the Kentucky State Fair. His sire, Eminent Queen's Foxy, has been a prize winner at both Shelbyville, and State Fair at Louisville. He is a grand-son of both Eminent II and Flying Fox, two imported bulls who sold for $12,000 and $7,500 each. Flying Fox and Eminent were not only show bulls on the Island and in America but both have a list of tested daughters to their credit. Eminent II now having more than sixty. This young bull, Lucy's Eminent Fox is an excellent individual and his breeding ranks him with the sires that head the greatest herds both on the Island and in America.

Corfu's Foxy Gretchen, one of the heifers bought, is a grand-daughter of Corfu's Pet the closest related cow to Jacoba Irene, now living, the same blood that made the Hood farm famous. This heifer is only eighteen months old and has given as much as twenty-five pounds of milk per day. In reporting this sale in its issue of April 26. The Jersey Bulletin says: "One of the features of the sale was the eighteen month-old heifer, Corfu's Foxy Gretchen, just fresh, that sold for $160."

The other heifer is a daughter of one of the sensational cows of the sale, who gave forty pounds of milk before she was three years old. This heifer is also a double grand-daughter of Rosy's Flying Fox, a prize winning bull at the St. Louis Fair in 1904.

Using such stock as this together, with what she already had, Mrs. Heron will soon have a herd strong and of none in this country.

RARE TREASURES OF THE INDIANS

Smithsonian Institution Gets Four Sacred Osage Packages.

HOLIEST FETISH OF THE TRIBE

They Are Generally Buried With Their "Keepers"—Tattooing Apparatus and Materials Used—Also Circlet of Human Scalps Among the Contents of Bundles.

Officials of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington are highly pleased over an addition which they have just made to their collection and which they regard as one of their choicest treasures. This acquisition comprises four sacred bundles or packs of the Osage Indians, very few of which have ever been obtained by scientists, as they are generally buried with their "keepers."

These sacred bundles are just as precious from a religious standpoint to the Indian as they are from a scientific standpoint to the ethnologist and are extremely hard to obtain. They represent the holiest fetish of a tribe, and so zealously are they guarded from any profanation that they are put in the charge of a special priest or medicine man, who keeps them carefully hidden. At certain periods they are opened and the contents worshipped amid the most elaborate ceremonies, but even at these times only the chosen men of the tribe are allowed to see the strangely assorted articles that are kept in the bundles.

How They Were Secured.

The bundles were secured for the National museum by Francis La Fleche, an educated Omaha Indian, who is in the employ of the bureau of American ethnology. While at work in Oklahoma he learned of the existence of such bundles and immediately opened negotiations with the Indian to whose care they had been intrusted. After exercising considerable diplomacy he succeeded in persuading the Indian to part with them and took them to Washington and turned them over to the bureau of ethnology.

One of these was opened with much care by Dr. Walter Hough, one of the curators of the National museum. Dr. Hough found the outside wrapping or sack to be made of a rare Indian fabric woven of the silky hair of the buffalo. This was bound with a buckskin band decorated with human scalps and the leg of an eagle. Inside this was a buckskin bag, and inside that a haversack made of a material resembling Chinese matting.

Most Sacred Object.

In this haversack were a pipe decorated with scalps, a tobacco bag, a braided cord made of woolen fabric and a bundle of buffalo bladders bound with a thong ornamented with scalps, and one other bundle, which was the most important of all, for it represented the "holy of holies." This bundle was a buckskin case, to which was bound a buckskin object resembling a head band. Inside this bundle was found the most sacred object of the pack—the body of a hawk, which had been mummified and then painted a brilliant vermilion and green. Attached to the tail was a circlet of human scalps. The body was suspended by a braided band made of woolen fabrics which evidently had been obtained by the tribe through trade with other Indians.

One of the three other bundles was found to contain the tattooing apparatus.

For Governor.

We are authorized to announce JAS. B. McCREARY as a candidate for Governor of Kentucky subject to the action of the Democratic primary election May 27.

One of the best Democratic speeches we have heard in years was delivered at Hardinsburg last Monday. Senator McCreary certainly knows the history of the Democratic party, and has the happy faculty of impressing the facts on his hearers. There is nothing overdrawn in what he says. He deals in facts, and makes them so plain a child can understand them. He had the closest attention and his hearers drank in every word he said. His speech helped the cause of Democracy in this county, and lined up the party. He is a big, brainy man, and worthy the support of all true Democrats.

You don't want to miss the lot sale at Irvington next Saturday. This is a live, progressive town, and is growing as no other town in the State. It is a good place to put your money, especially in real estate. Go there and buy a lot and see it grow in value.

Judge Pollard, candidate for the nomination for Attorney General, caught the crowd in his few minutes talk, and impressed them with the fact that he was in the race for that office. The Judge is a live Democrat and a worker from the mountains.

Dr. A. R. Fisher brought to this office a rare flower. It was a pink dogwood blossom from the Confederate Home at Anchorage; and this reminds us that the white blossoms are plentiful this year, which is a sure sign of a big corn crop.

Judge Moss, of Bowling Green, is the presiding Judge at Hardinsburg.

With the increase of lambs, Mr. Moorman's figures tally very well with the assessor's findings.

SENATOR M'CREEARY AT HARDINSBURG.

Says Democratic Principles Are the Only Salvation For the Nation---Declared Himself For Better Roads and Better Educational System.

DEMOCRATS GLAD TO SEE HIM

Hartford, Ky., May 9.—[Special]—Senator McCreary, the Democratic candidate for Governor, spoke at the Court House Monday to the largest body of Democrats that has been seen at the county seat for many years.

There was hardly standing room for those who wished to hear a man who had been so conspicuous in the public affairs of the nation in the last quarter of a century.

Mr. McCreary acquitted himself with great honor in a speech of an hour or more, dealing with the vital issues before the people, and assuring them in the wind-up that the only hope for the country was the ultimate triumph of Democratic principles in the nation.

Mr. McCreary promised the people that if elected Governor, it would be his sole aim to do the best he could for the people of a great old State. He said he was for better roads; a better educational system, and for those things that would put Kentucky to the front.

The Senator made a fine impression, and he will get a large vote in the county. He impressed upon Democrats the importance of going out to the primary in July. He said that Republicans in other States would watch for the result in our State this year, and our success would have an important bearing on the Presidential race in 1912.

THE KNIGHT OF THE SILVER

A Romance Of Drussenland

CHAPTER XIII.
THE princess' face told me nothing that night. She received me very graciously, would not let me kneel to her. But there was something in her manner which made me feel that the hopes which had grown up in my heart so quickly that day were luxuriant weeds, fit only to be cut down. She would not let me talk much about what had happened in the city.
"We are in perilous times," she said. "But you must be my prisoner still. You are not yet able to brave dangers. Here you are safe. Get strong again quickly. Sir Verrall, for I have need of you."

And so she dismissed me. Princess Daria had a garden. The only entrance to it was from her suit of apartments. High walls surrounded it, and there was no fear of prying eyes. Here I was privileged to walk or lie at full length in the shade of some tree, filling my lungs with new health at every breath. Here Jaspar and I talked, and the princess joined us, staying only a little while at first, but afterward longer. She talked of plans for the future. My friends were so few that it was impossible for me to stand unless something could be devised against my enemies. Truth to tell, my friends and enemies troubled me little just then. I was too happy to fear the future, for the princess became each day less a princess and more a woman. I lived in the present. I told them something of my country, of London, of railroads and telegraphs and of many things which in Drussenland had never been heard of.

"You tell of strange things, Sir Verrall," Jaspar said. "But because the people in Drussenland are superstitious and legend loving you must not think that we are all ready to believe tales so far beyond all possibility."

"I speak the truth. There are even more marvelous things that I have not told you."

"Her highness loves not superstition and has no fear of disasters which the priests prophesy. We know that no miracle brought you into our land and that to account for your coming you used a legend to save yourself. Why seek to deceive us who are your friends?"

"Yes, friends," said the princess softly.

I was inclined to be angry, but a moment's reflection told me how impossible my tales must seem to them.

"Indeed, there is no deceit," I answered. "Things are as I have told you in my country. Besides, my coming was somewhat of a miracle, and it was not I who claimed to be the expected knight, remember. It was O'Ryan who suggested it, and the priests believed it."

Then I told them how I came into Drussenland, beginning with the tale that poor Mustapha told that night.

"Tell me the history of Drussenland," I said.

Jaspar told it to me, hurrying through the legendary part, dilating fully on that which was known to be true. The Drussenlanders were the descendants of a great army gathered from all the nations of the world—so Jaspar said—which was led into a country beyond the hills to fight for the true religion. Year after year this army, constantly recruited, fought with varying success, and at last came peace. Some returned home again; some remained in the land of their warfare, took wives of the daughters of the land, and wandered forth to find a city to dwell in. So they had come to Drussenland, and, as the years passed, became a great people. This was the legendary part which Jaspar said might have some truth in it.

To me it seemed clear. These people were descended from the survivors of the last crusade.

Ever and again the princess would lead me to consider my present position. No ancient history could help me in that.

"The days pass swiftly," she said. "You are almost strong now. The priests clamor for action, and the people cry with them. What are we to do?"

"Jaspar suggested a way out of the difficulty," I answered. "My death shall release your highness of much trouble."

"It is no time to talk folly. It is time to act," was all she said to me.

The princess told me that she needed knights with strong arms and strong courage. She said the priests were loyal to her apart from my cause. After a long conversation I suggested to her that I would attend the next council and tell the members that her enemies should be defeated. I volunteered to go to Yadasara as a spy. The princess was apprehensive of such a scheme, but I soon relieved her fears. I told her I hoped to place her on the throne, and when she asked me what I expected as reward I answered her in a language that love dictated. She understood. Then she asked my name. When I told her it was Clinton Verrall it pleased her.

"It is the name of the man who worships you," I whispered, and I took her hand and, bending low, kissed it passionately. I dared not touch her lips.

Just then Jaspar came in and told the princess that the count was asking for her. She gave me her hand and said:

"Be brave for my sake tomorrow. For my sake return from Yada-sara." Then she left me.

The council was fixed for the afternoon. It was an unusual time, but the princess had so ordered it. The moment I entered the hall I felt equal to any emergency. Danger hung in the air, and my courage rose to meet it.

I mounted the steps and took my place as near to the princess' chair as possible. I endeavored to hold my own firmly but courteously, neither making myself too prominent nor seeking to escape observation. I was not a man prepared to hurl defiance in the teeth of a crowd incensed against me.

Vasca stood beside the chair and to him I bowed. Then I turned to the chief of the priests and bowed to him lower still.

Purposely, I think, the princess did not keep the council waiting. I had

"BE HONEST MEN, NOT FOOLS OF PASSION." taken my place only a few moments when the curtains were drawn, and she stepped to her seat. She shot one glance at me—so swift that I

The priest began to speak in a rather singsong tone, as though he were reciting a lesson he had committed to memory.

"The expected knight was to do many things in Drussenland," he said. "He was to bring peace and plenty into it. That he should be mighty in achievement I believed, but with that I have nothing to do. My office hinders me from wielding a sword, and, though my heart may leap at the sight of brave deeds, I can have no part in them. My office is to watch over the sacred things of this land, to punish those who bring out great religion into disrepute, giving occasion to those of lesser intellect to revile and turn the God we worship into a jest.

"Your highness has broken a law, and therefore your people have broken a law. Think you peace and plenty shall be poured into the laps of those who sin? I rejoiced at the knight's coming, so is my sorrow keenest that he has made his mission of none effect. For him punishment awaits at the hand of him who sent him. Our duty is not to delay his going. If it be so willed that as he came miraculously so miraculously can he be taken from us, then it shall be. But death is the only means we mortals know of by which he can return. Therefore by death should we seek pardon for ourselves. I would my words could take a happier tone. If my eyes are blinded, if I have not read our laws aright, then power will be granted to the knight to increase my wisdom. I wish not to condemn him unheard. It is not I that condemn him—it is our religion which does so."

"For my own part, I had rather remain silent," said Count Vasca. "It may seem envious in me to seek to condemn a knight who in tournament has met me honestly and in the field has fought valiantly. Indeed, I speak only for the many as chief of the knights who attend your highness."

"What then, Sir Vasca," said the princess, looking fixedly at him.

She did not take her eyes from him while he spoke. Perhaps he saw distrust in them, for, after beginning so humbly, he went on bitterly enough:

"The priest has spoken of the laws. With them I have nothing to do, but since the priests and I have been often at variance, in that we are agreed in this matter proves the justice of our complaint. The knight was to accomplish two things with which I am concerned—to place your highness on the throne in Yadasara and to find a treasure that should bring plenty to our land. I blame not that these things are not yet accomplished, but that nothing has been done. We are at present a divided country, and whichever side finds the treasure wins also the throne in Yadasara. These foreign dogs the king has brought into this land would leave him tomorrow were they paid for doing so, and there are hundreds of men in this city who would march to Yadasara tomorrow were the treasure in the king's hands. The time is ripe to win or to lose, for success or rebellion. They expected much of Sir Verrall's coming. They believe they are doomed to disappointment, therefore they cry out. Though, as a true Drussenlander, I have no pity for those who attacked the knight when he stood your highness' sentinel, still I affirm that he has only himself to blame. If he is the expected knight let him fulfill his mission; if not let him answer for the lie which made us give him welcome."

A murmur of approbation sounded through the hall. Then all eyes turned toward me. I found courage in the look that was in the princess' eyes as she turned to me.

"I am accused of breaking a law or of causing your highness to break it," I said. "It is true. That I succeeded, though with difficulty, as you, who heard me make my petition, know well, is the greatest good I have accomplished since I have been in Drussenland. I will tell you why. Your priest said if he had judged amiss I should have power to increase his wisdom. That power I have. I wish him power to understand, and not only the priest, but all you who bear me. From whence I came you do not know. You have a legend which you look to be fulfilled, and at my coming you welcomed me. Think you fulfills come exactly as men expect? The priests have wisdom, and they prophesy, but I came into Drussenland from a more enlightened country, where the wisdom of your priests would be but as the idle prattling of a child. This law of yours that prisoners of war shall be slain was framed when men knew little of him they worshiped. This he bids me tell you—that to kill men as you would kill your prisoners is murder. In that the priests prophesy disaster to this land because that law is broken they err most grievously. I prophesy peace for this land if you let mercy rule you rather than vengeance. I fear nothing of what you can do to me. Death: What is it? A moment in time that sends me to a life of rest. But I have a mission, as every true man has, and if in living I cannot fulfill it I shall be fulfilled in dying. That is my answer to your priests. They err from ignorance. I have been given power to speak wisdom to them. Let them beware how they shut their ears to the voice that speaks the truth."

"Count Vasca's accusation is of a different kind. I have not yet placed your princess on the throne in Yadasara. I have not yet found the treasure hidden in this land. But he has made a graver accusation, not against me, but against you. What men are they who hold loyalty so lightly, who care so little who reigns over them, who grumble so loudly and who would so readily march to Yadasara to fight against her highness? Who are they? Speak! In her highness' name, I promise pardon to any man who confesses to disloyalty. No answer? What? Are we so strangely

Facts About Motherhood

The experience of Motherhood is trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at the time of child-birth, but many approach the experience with an organism unfit for the trial of strength, and when the strain is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, women will persist in going blindly to the trial. It isn't as though the experience came upon them unawares. They have ample time in which to prepare, but they, for the most part, trust to chance and pay the penalty.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy, and strong.

Any woman who would like special advice in regard to this matter is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Her letter will be held in strict confidence.

divided that in this hall only loyal subjects find a place? Are all the murmurers without? Remember, the count accused you, not I. I have fought beside some of you. I have witnessed many of you do gallantly I have more faith in you than the count has."

And then, turning quickly to the princess, I added:

"These are honest men, your highness, but they feared to contradict your kinsman."

The rafters rang again. I had become an orator to some purpose.

"You see, Count Vasca, you were mistaken. Why when the enemy fled across the river the other day were we not led to follow them? You are a soldier. You know why. The time was not ripe. It would have been to court defeat. We knew not at what point the city was least defended. Neither is the time ripe for the finding of the treasure, but it ripens."

"Any knight could speak so. We expect deeds, not words, from Sir Verrall," he answered.

"You have forced me to words. Mark you not—and I spoke to those in the hall—"mark you not how the two things go together? To set the princess on the throne in Yadasara and to find a treasure. At the sword's point must one be accomplished. Is it not the sword's point which shall unlock the hiding place of the other? Your treasures lies hidden where only knightly deeds can win it. Your treasure is valueless until the foreigner is driven from the land. Where think you a treasure would most likely lie in Drussenland? Where but in the greatest stronghold the land contains—in the fortress of Yadasara?"

Again the rafters rang. The knights shouted as good knights will shout at the promise of conflict. Even the priests forgot to scowl and listened.

"Here are swords in plenty. Lead us to victory!" So the knights shouted, and I knew that the greatest danger was over.

"I will do more," I said. "Three days hence I will go to Yadasara. I will enter the city and spy out its weakness—that is, if her highness gives me leave."

The count's lip curled.

"You will not return," he said.

"I shall, Count Vasca. I shall return to lead loyal men to victory."

I turned to face the now excited crowd. I spread out my arms, and I cried to them:

"Sir knights, loyal men of Drussenland, have I answered my accusers? Shut your trust in me, or, if there is no trust, see here I stand unarmed, draw your weapons and slay me."

I had played a bold game. It had served me well. I had won.

HE HID IN JAIL.

Served Term For Burglary to Avoid Arrest For Safe Blowing.

After having broken into a house and obtained imprisonment in the Minneapolis jail for ten months to escape arrest for blowing a safe Harry Bowman was identified by a deputy sheriff just as his term was expiring.

Bowman, it is charged, blew the safe of the Farmers' Savings bank of Carroll, Ia., Oct. 9, 1909. He was aided by Johnny Barden, who was shot a year ago in Chicago while attempting to avoid arrest.

The two escaped from the Carroll bank with $3,500. Authorities learned they were hiding in Chicago. Officers found Barden, alias "Southern Dan," alias "Texas King," shaving in a room of the house they occupied, while Bowman was eating supper in the kitchen.

When the officers attempted to arrest Barden he hurled a chair at them and jumped through the window, but a shot brought him down dead. In the confusion Bowman escaped.

After traversing the country under various disguises and aliases Bowman went to Minneapolis. Narrow escapes from arrest drove him to desperation. The death of Barden preyed on his mind. Finally he determined to hide in jail, so he broke into a house and gave himself up.

What an Account Book Does.

A bank book with check book and stubs is the easiest way of keeping a cash account, and then you have the bank to prove your account for you.

The cash register is a means of keeping accounts of receipts and payments combined with a "bell punch" upon honesty. System is an indispensable requisite of successful business; honesty and ability will not succeed without it. The first step in this direction on the part of youth is keeping a personal cash account. The orderly setting down of receipts and expenditures confronting oneself with what has been expended and for what purpose carries a continual moral warning if need be, and a lesson in responsibility. The balance, the proof and the test bring home the power and responsibility of receiving and spending. A Barton Hepburn in Leslie's.

MAN READY TO DIE TO SAVE HIS WIFE'S HONOR.

New York's Governor Respects Condemned Man Against His Will.

Rather than have the fact that his wife had dishonored him disclosed to the world Charles L. Green, a farmer of New Scotland, N. Y., was willing to go to the electric chair. This developed when Governor Dix granted a respite to Green, who was to have been electrocuted.

Green killed his daughter at their home last June and at the same time terribly wounded his wife. He refused to tell anything about the reason for the crime, and when an effort was made by his friends a few days ago to have his sentence commuted to life imprisonment he positively refused to sign the application. Now the real reason has leaked out.

In an affidavit signed by Mrs. Green, who is still suffering from the wounds her husband inflicted, she says that the cause of the shooting was the discovery by her husband that she had been unfaithful to him. The knowledge aroused him to fury, and he tried to kill his wife. The daughter tried to save her and was herself killed.

In the affidavit Mrs. Green says that her husband had commanded her to tell nothing about the cause of the tragedy.

"He refused to permit me," the affidavit says, "to take the stand and testify to anything that would help him and hurt me. He told me he would rather die in the electric chair than have the people know or say a single word against my character. I feel that in a way I am responsible for all that he has done, and the burden rests heavily upon me."
